Alfred Fisher to Compose Orchestral Work

Since the age of three, Alfred Fisher has been involved in music and by the time he was 11 he was composing. Therefore, it comes as no surprise that Dr. Fisher will spend his time as a McCalla Professor composing an orchestral piece of music for the Edmonton Symphony.

According to Dr. Fisher, he has a natural bent for the dramatic situation and his work for the Symphony will include not only the musical adaptation but will provide for dance interpretation as well, although the piece of work will be able to stand on its own. Dr. Fisher intends to "tell a story." In his own words, "As a composer, I am aware of several interactive levels in the composite narrative structure. The basic theoretical assumption in my work is that what creates coherence and organicity in music is the 'property' of transformability: that musical elements may be not only ordered and reordered, but that they may be so processed as to sustain, indeed reinforce both the fundamentality of the elements themselves and the unbroken pertinacity of their transformed representative."

Dr. Fisher is a composer and theorist and currently is involved in composition research. The Professorship will free him to devote the necessary time to compose a 20 to 25-minute "suite" "based on a scenario that will stand independently as a concert piece but, through design, color, gesture, as well as the previously mentioned narrative perspective, will lend itself naturally to choreography." He hopes to have the work completed by September, 1986.

He sees the piece as a serious statement and has numerous ideas as to the kind of music he would like to work out. Yet Dr. Fisher emphasizes that the "suite" will be "accessible", meaning that the audience will be able to appreciate and understand it.

Dr. Fisher already has had some 30 pieces published and/or performed and he is the recipient of numerous awards and recognitions including Composer-in-Residence, Banff School of Fine Arts, the Presser Foundation

Prize, and several Canada Council grants. He received his undergraduate music degree from Boston University and his postgraduate degrees from Michigan State University. His specific interests are composition, theory, analysis, 19th and 20th century history, music appreciation, interdisciplinary courses and piano. □

Bessai's McCalla Project

The critical study of the collective creation as a specifically important factor in the developing English Canadian drama of the 70s, both in itself as a new native dramatic expression and for its direct and indirect influence on contemporary playwriting, will be the research project undertaken by Diane Bessai, English, during her McCalla Professorship.

Dr. Bessai points out that "during an intense period of Canadian professional theatre development in the 70s, certain companies of the alternative theatre movement devised their own performance tests through the combined efforts of actors, a director and usually, a writer." This characteristic collective approach was to investigate documentary material on an agreed subject from the Canadian present or past, improvise scenes and characterizations, gradually shaping the material into dramatic form.

The motive, according to Dr. Bessai, was in part prompted by the "absence of a substantial body of modern Canadian plays". It was also prompted by the current interest in radical theatricality so that in their approach to the new material, the collective companies were intent on the challenges of the open playing space and the possibilities of presentational performance (as opposed to representational) for the displacement of conventional audience-performer relationships.

Dr. Bessai contends that "writers, when they were employed, were participators in the collective process rather than initiators or sole authors of the plays, but their involvement in the process in several important instances was important to their further development as dramatists". Consequently, features of the collective creation are inherent in certain individually scripted plays of the period. The collective creation, with or without a playwright, becomes an important subject for critical as well as theatrical examination.

Dr. Bessai has been developing the basic rationale of this study for a number of years and will use, in particular, three of her published essays: "Documentary Theatre in Canada: An Investigation into Questions and Backgrounds"; "The Regionalism of Canadian Drama"; and "Documentary into Drama: the Donnelly Trilogy"; to formulate the principles of her approach.

Once her study is complete, Dr. Bessai is "optimistic" that it will be published as part of a new series of critical studies on Canadian dramatists planned by the Toronto theatre publishers Simon and Pierre, under the editorship of Professor Christopher Innes of York University. □

Specialist in Animal Care to Present J.G. O'Donoghue Memorial Lecture

Jim Ashman, Supervisor of the Animal Care Program, Animal Industry Branch, Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food, will give the J.G. O'Donoghue Memorial Lecture at 8 p.m., 27 March in Tory LB1.

Dr. Ashman, who is currently a scientific advisor to the World Society for the Protection of Animals, will discuss "Humaneness of Intensive Agriculture".

The lecture commemorates the memory of the late Dr. J.G. O'Donoghue who was the extension veterinarian with Alberta Agriculture for many years. Subsequently, he was Director of Veterinary Services, Assistant Deputy Minister and finally Deputy Minister of Agriculture. Dr.

O'Donoghue lectured in veterinary medicine in the Faculty of Agriculture and Forestry at the University during most of his career with the government. A trust was established by his family, friends and colleagues with the income generated by this fund, along with matching grants from the Alberta government, being used to fund the Memorial Lectures.

The lecture is aimed primarily at the pre-veterinary and animal science students but will be of interest to faculty, graduate students, veterinarians and the public at large. Parking has been arranged for Zone E, immediately north of Earth Sciences and Tory Buildings, and also in Windsor Car Park. □

Nursing Research—the First Step

"Nursing research should be part of everyday nursing, not just for academics," Jennifer Hunt, Director of Nursing Services at the Royal Marsden Hospital in London, England, emphasized during her 11 to 15 March term as Distinguished Visitor to the Faculty of Nursing.

Dr. Hunt has been involved in nursing research since 1967. Wanting to combine the academic side and stimulus of research with her nursing skills, she has conducted many research investigations and helped other nurses implement research findings in everyday nursing care.

Although nursing research findings are available, they are not always used, and it is the implementation aspect that Dr. Hunt terms her "pet project." She calls it "bridging the gap", and says that talking to nurses, helping with the research and encouraging them to do something within their capabilities helps nurses to develop an interest in nursing research.

There are three main stages of research and implementation to go through, she explained; the descriptive study, experimental implementation and permanent implementation if the treatment is successful in its test trials.

One of Dr. Hunt's first research projects at the Royal Marsden was the study of hair loss, which is a side effect of chemotherapy. A study was conducted on breast cancer patients to determine if "scalp cooling" is effective in reducing hair loss in patients who have been given certain drugs such as Adriamycin, an anti-tumorigenic. "Scalp cooling" requires a cold pack to be applied to the heads of patients for 15 minutes before and 30 minutes after chemotherapy.

In England, the "hot/cold packs" used (the North American equivalent is "freezer packs") contain a fluid which can be partially frozen and molded to a patient's head. Although the sensation is very uncomfortable, the success rate stands at 78 percent.

Dr. Hunt has also been involved in studies on patients suffering long-term pain. A survey of 100 patients revealed a great deal about the location and intensity of pain, and the effect of the prescribed treatment. A wider survey of family, friends and health care professionals revealed that the health care professional's perception of pain was different from that of the patient. This study helped researchers develop a standardized pain assessment chart to document all kinds of pain, and this provides information for better control of pain.

Communication is an important aspect of Dr. Hunt's research, and she helped make a videotape that will be used to teach communication skills to nurses in training. The tape, filmed over three days, recorded live sessions of nurses as they worked with cancer victims. "It's a stimulus tape," said Dr. Hunt. "The teacher can ask students what they thought about communication with the patient, and how they thought the situation should be handled."

The tape has been edited and can be shown in segments, each one dealing with a different situation. More tapes are in production on care of the elderly, communication with children and their parents, and communication with the mentally handicapped.

During her visit, Dr. Hunt consulted with medical personnel at the Cross Cancer Institute and the Edmonton General, Royal Alexandra and University Hospitals. She also gave a public lecture entitled "Clinical Nursing Research: Developing Awareness and Skills in Nursing Staff," and conducted a teleconference for the Alberta Hospital Association on "Pain Management in Oncology Nursing." □

Want Time to Think? Use CAI!

"Using the Computer as a Tool, Tutor and Tutee" was Gene Romaniuk's subject at a recent CITL-sponsored session.

In an interview with Folio later, Dr. Romaniuk, Associate Chairman of Educational Psychology, and an enthusiastic proponent of computer-assisted instruction (CAI) whittled his lecture down to a few telling points:

- Faculty who are not computer literate should take some CAI courses themselves, to discover its possibilities. They could be surprised.

- Academics benefit from using CAI to instill facts and impart skills.
- Students benefit, too: they can learn at their own pace, repeating or moving on as they wish.
- When computer-assisted instruction is allowed to take over the repetitive work of instilling facts and imparting skills, professors will have time again...time to counsel...to inspire...and to research.
- And those, after all, are the true functions of the professor. □

Music of India Festival

The full range of the music of India, from classical to folk music, will be heard at the Music of India Festival, 28 March to 4 April.

Sponsored by the University of Alberta Steering Committee of the Shastri Indo-Canadian Institute, in cooperation with the Council of India Societies and the Indian Students' Association, the Festival offers three musical experiences.

"Raga Magic: A Classical Concert", with vocalist and instruments, takes place on Thursday, 28 March at 8 pm in the Students' Union Theatre. "Indian Music Workshop" offers an introduction to the basics of Indian music and instruments on Tuesday, 2 April, 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., 2-34 Fine Arts Building. The Festival concludes with "Gala of Folk Music" on Thursday, 4 April, at 8 p.m. in the Stu-

Gilpin Memorial Scholarships Awarded

The R.R. Gilpin Memorial Scholarships were recently presented to two graduate students from the Department of Mechanical Engineering.

Mrs. R.R. Gilpin awarded cheques of $750 each to Larry Kostiuk and Glen Rovang at a dinner reception at the Faculty Club.

The scholarships were established in memory of Professor Gilpin who served in the department from 1970 to 1982. His innovative and fundamental research made him a leader within the department and brought him international recognition. The awards given in his name go to candidates who exemplify the intellectual curiosity and dedication which characterized Professor Gilpin.

Larry Kostiuk, a former resident of Pine Point, N.W.T., received his BSc degree in Mechanical Engineering from the University of Calgary in 1983. He also holds an NSERC Graduate Scholarship. His MSc thesis concerns the thermal performance of an insulated masonry structure.

Glen Rovang graduated from our University's Department of Mechanical Engineering in 1983. He was a winner of the Glatz Memorial Prize for the best design in his graduating year. Mr. Rovang, who is from Peace River, is currently finishing his thesis on the use of thermosyphons for efficient recovery of low grade heat. □

Efim Etkind: Distinguished Visitor

The Department of Comparative Literature, with the support of Romance Languages, and Slavic and East European Studies, is pleased to announce the visit of Efim Etkind of the Université de Paris, who will be Distinguished Visitor from 26 March to 13 April.

A graduate of the University of Leningrad, Professor Etkind moved to the West in the early seventies and was offered professorships at several universities, including some in America. He settled in Paris and, in his capacity as visiting professor, he taught at such universities as Texas (Austin), Harvard and Toronto. He is a member of the International Award Committee for the Neustad Prize in Literature, the most prestigious award, after the Nobel prize, given to a living writer.

Professor Etkind specializes in the following areas: French literature, Russian literature, comparative literature, theory of translation and theory of literature. He has published several books of which the following brought him an international reputation: Les Romans de Zola des années 60 (1957); Poetry and Translation (1963); Comparative Stylistics as a Foundation for the Theory of Translation (1965); Form as Content (1977); and The Matter of Verse (1978). This latter work is probably the most significant contribution to the theory of versification.

The Department of Comparative Literature would like to emphasize that Professor Etkind has a record of scholarly cooperation with the University of Alberta. Recently, he contributed an article to a collection of studies devoted to V. Aksénov which is to appear under the editorship of Edward Mozejko. A number of internationally renowned scholars participated in this endeavor.

During his stay on campus, Professor Etkind will give a mini-series of lectures and/or seminars on the following topics:

Wednesday, 27 March, 3 p.m., "The Poetry of Marina Tsvetaeva" (in Russian). 776 General Services Building.
Friday, 29 March, 3:30 p.m., "Problems of Comparative Literature." Senate Chamber, Arts Building.
Monday, 1 April, 3 p.m., "The Requiem of Akhmatova" (in Russian). 776 General Services Building.
Tuesday, 2 April, 4:30 p.m., "Problems of Poetic Translation." Arts 17.
Friday, 12 April, 3:30 p.m., "Modern Russian Literature in the USSR and in Exile." Senate Chamber, Arts Building.

Professor Etkind's presence on campus will give an excellent opportunity to both faculty and students to establish contact with a great scholar who willingly shares his experiences. □

Grad Students' Research Symposium "Support" by University Community

I have just taken part in an intellectual immersion by attending the Graduate Students' Research Symposium held on 4, 5 and 6 March. I listened to over forty papers and looked at a similar number of poster sessions. The Symposium, as I suspected, proved that the graduate program at the University need take second place to none. The over-all content of the papers was excellent and they were delivered in a thoroughly professional manner. Many of the poster presentations were superbly produced. Our graduates show a calibre of research ability which compares very favorably to any number of international scientific conferences that I have attended in recent years.

Any undergraduate student who went to this three-day symposium would have gained a better idea of what a university is all about than in three months of a regular term—and I would not restrict this observation to undergraduates.

More than 100 graduate students participated in this event. They were enthusiastic and, almost without exception, the ones I talked to regarded the idea of the Symposium as a worthwhile endeavor and one which should be continued in some form. By my estimates about 400 people listened to the papers and visited the poster sessions over three days. For a university of about 24,000 students and academic staff this is a poor level of response. I was particularly disappointed and disconcerted to see that many participating departments had none of their faculty attend, nor indeed almost any of their graduate and undergraduate students other than those directly involved. If we, the academic community, cannot be supportive of our own programs we should not be surprised at the lack of sympathetic support by the larger public community.

I suggest that my colleagues read the recent article in University Affairs, March, titled "Is underfunding our major problem?", by the academic vice-president of Guelph. To paraphrase Dr. Clark, we had better start viewing ourselves as a university and less as a collection of sub-specialists. We evidently have a lot to learn about what makes a university.

Student Course Evaluation Forms Available Through CITL

As the term is coming to an end, it is time to consider assessing what occurred during the preceding weeks. The University of Alberta is making a standard form available for instructors to be used as one instrument in his/her evaluation activity. The form, entitled the "Student Course Evaluation Form," is designed to provide diagnostic feedback on teaching and has been used for several years by many departments.
